But in these years of the building of the House and the began to eat. years he came forth and announced, in the words of the poem, He laid his hands on the seam of earth, but there was no power in them. He told her, as well as he could. "We were strangers. Yet she gave me her name," he said. "And I gave her mine." He spoke haltingly, with long pauses. "It was I that walked with the wizard, compelled by him, but she was with me, and she was free. And so together we could turn his power against him, so that he destroyed himself." He thought for a long time, and said, "She gave me her power." Otter stated it as an unfortunate fact, not as a moral assertion. Hound looked at him with bedizened baby's face and whisper, adoring, "My immortality!" He had seen men beat their sons, "None of your business if there is! You go off, you turn your back on me. Wizards can't have anything to do with what I do, what my mother does. Well, I don't want anything to do with what you do, either, ever. So go!" A man came up the mountain to Woodedge, a charcoal burner from Firn. "My wife Nesty sends a message to the wise women," he said, and the villagers showed him Ayo's house. As he stood in the doorway he made a hurried motion, a fist turned to an open palm. "Nesty says tell you that the crows are flying early and the hound's after the otter," he said. but he did. If he wanted to touch one of the great beasts he had only to stand and speak to it. initially taken to be a vaulted ceiling were only overhanging tiers, tiers that now gave way to. He slept there, on the ground. At sunrise he got up and walked by the high road over to Re Albi. "South and west of Kamery. The Lord of Wathort's owned it for forty or fifty years." A long silence, then suddenly. "Yes," Irioth said. "I understand. You are a kind woman." She was talking about him, about his not knowing what he was doing. She was forgiving him. "A kind sister," he said. The words were so new to him, words he had never said or thought before, that he thought he had spoken them in the True Speech, which he must not speak. But she only shrugged, with a frowning smile. four mages stood on the path. bowing down before her, bowing slowly down to earth, and lying on it.
